

THE GOOD ACRE

FOOD + COMMUNITY

INTRODUCING THE GOOD ACRE

We are pleased to introduce The Good Acre, a local non-profit food hub designed to enhance how food is grown and shared in the Twin Cities region. We believe our work will demonstrate the viability of new economic models that will expand sustainable food production and access to local, healthy food. By working directly with independent, small-scale farmers, The Good Acre provides the tools and infrastructure to help grow their business and access new markets for their products.

The Good Acre also provides a new multi-farm CSA (Community Supported Agriculture) product that delivers healthy, locally grown fresh produce to workplaces across the Twin Cities. We hope you'll take advantage of this affordable and convenient opportunity to access sustainably grown fruits and vegetables.

GOOD HEALTH MEANS GOOD BUSINESS

Research shows that people who eat the recommended amount of fruits and vegetables are less likely to have diet-related chronic diseases, are sick less often, and feel better. It goes without saying that healthier people will be more productive, live longer and have lower healthcare costs.

HOW WE'RE DIFFERENT

Rather than working with just one farm, The Good Acre partners with several local growers, thereby offering a variety of crops in your boxes that a single-site farm cannot. By working with multiple farms, we're helping to minimize the risks associated with farming from the consumer's perspective. Unlike a traditional CSA which uses neighborhood drop-sites, we deliver your box to your place of work, eliminating the need to make a special stop and providing more convenience.

WHAT'S IN A BOX

Over the course of the growing season, you can expect to see over 70 varieties of vegetables, fruits and herbs. In addition to tasty produce, each box will consist of a newsletter with simple recipes, news from the farmers, and description of box contents.
